“ Dear Delaney Family and Friends,

John was a great co-worker and friend. We had many conversations over the past few months and am glad we did. He had profound insight regarding the psyche of people and their personalities. No topic was off limits for discussion. Art, travel, books, food, life, singlehood and marriage barely scratch the surface of the topics we discussed during the times we spoke together.

When we worked together in Manhattan, we shared our enjoyment of ordering Chinese takeout by cracking open the fortune cookies and reading the messages to each other. Most of those messages were duds, but a few were great. We would take a vote and ask each other, "Is this message cubicle worthy?" If we decided yes, I would take a piece of scotch tape and paste it to the interior of my cubicle. Only 3 -4 fortune cookie messages made it onto the cubicle. Sometimes in the middle of talking and to bring levity to a serious moment John would stop and ask, "Is this cubicle-worthy?" That always made us laugh.

If we are lucky, we meet 3 - 4 people over the course of a lifetime who truly understand and live with values of integrity, honesty, and enjoyment of the journey, no matter the circumstances. John was one of those people, and I will miss him.

Respectfully, Ruth
