“ A fine young man from a fine neighborly family in the 20th century small town of Tarrytown tradition. After college I would see Jack and his refrain was (depending on the season of weather)-in the spring-one more season on the golf course, in the Fall-one more season on the ski slopes out west. Always kind, always thoughtful. Jack and his mother Edith had a special twinkle about themselves which they always shared. Golf, skiing, and twinkle. William A. Cerbone
