“ And now the sands of time slowly transpire, like sand through the hourglass. Our mortality is called to question when a loved one passes. Our noble desire is to see all our loved ones again, or at least one more time. Daily thoughts and actions are now committed to memory. As we get older the videotape of life gains speed every day and when we wake we should all say a silent prayer for another day in this world. Who holds the cards of our lives? In this world, genetics, in the next who knows? Lucky are the ones who know the existence of a supreme being, or at least one who holds our puppet strings. At night when we are alone with our thoughts the ID of the mind allows us to peer into the unknown for a few milliseconds. And we see the people and places where we once were and the people we once knew. That is the beauty of all who have passed before us. As Jim and his sons will remember their mom in happiness and sadness, the dreams are there nonetheless. Another beauty of being human is the capacity to recall the people we have loved in life. The shared tender moments and yes, even the petty squabbles. All are in the stream of our consciousness. I remember the talks I had with Sandy on the phone about life in generic terms. Underneath the facade, there was an acute awareness of the metaphysical. We would talk about such things. I will miss dearly those precious moments we shared across copper wires.

“ Sandy was a beautiful person inside and out. Her warm smile always invited you to share you feelings with hers. Her personality always made you feel like you were part of the family. She was a person who loved life to the fullest and she radiated a glow that you knew she was happy in all her days. I know both Jim and her sons will miss her and all the people with whom she came in contact. This side of the world mill miss a truly beautiful and shining star.

“ Sandy was a strong women. She raised two great young men. I don't remember a time I was around her that she didn't talk about her boys. The legacy she leaves behind is one that all mothers strive for, two young men that are productive, smart and respectful. She will be missed.

“ To Jim, Danny and John,
May your memories of your wife and mother carry you through during this time. Know that even though she is no longer physically here, you will always carry her in your hearts. I'll miss her also and will always remember how she made me laugh when I visited her and Jim. Know that you guys are in my prayers.
